CEG supports the sustainable transport aims of policy 10.1.

The development of a self-sustaining new village built on the principles of garden city design presents a unique opportunity to build into the design a full range of measures to encourage sustainable forms of transport. Unlike with extensions to existing settlements, the master plan approach can be used to ensure that the mix of uses are located such to maximise the use of modes of travel other than the motor car. The aim of creating a self-sustaining new village will minimise the need to travel distances and maximise the opportunities for safe journeys to school, health and community facilities, employment and longer distance modes of public transport.
