CEG supports policy 10.5 and its focus of requiring the layout and design of all new development to create well designed high quality places where people enjoy living, working and visiting.

The allocation of a new village creates the opportunity of designing public realm as an integral part of the community. Unlike with extensions to existing settlements where the existing public realm is already established and may have been designed and conceived of to serve a limited size of community, the new village, built on principles of garden city design can be sized, located and designed to achieve the appropriate scale and function for a village of an identified scale.
