Geological Site Information

The geological site database includes and describes geological sites which are of regional or local importance for their scientific, historical and/or educational value unlike the strictly scientific criteria applied to the SSSIs (Sites of Special Scientific Interest) which are of national importance. These are not 'second tier' sites but sites of regional and local value in their own right.

Some of these sites are being designated as Local Geological Sites (LOGS), formerly called Regionally Important Geological Sites, or have the potential to be so designated, and these sites are marked as such. Existing SSSIs which have been designated for their geological importance are also included in this database.

Note: Some of the sites in the geological site database are solely of historical interest as a record of an important or interesting discovery. There are also sites which are not strictly geological but nevertheless have a geological connection, for example buildings constructed of local stone. These sites have not been included in this report.

Although many of the sites listed are publicly accessible, inclusion of a site in this database does not imply any rights of access. Permission to visit must always be obtained from the relevant landowner.

1. Millennium Stone, Potential Local Geological Site, TQ54619615

'Millennium stone' Navestock

At the hamlet called Horseman Side a giant boulder of ferricrete (210cm x 150cm x 60cm) sits on a concrete plinth by the road. It was placed here in 2000 to mark the new millennium. The boulder was excavated from a neighbouring field.

Although the engraving on the plinth states that it is a puddingstone, it is, in fact a ferricrete, which is an iron-cemented gravel.

2. Langtons Gravel Pit, Potential Local Geological Site, TQ57799476

Langtons former gravel pit, Weald Country Park, South Weald,
(adjoining Sandpit Lane at the eastern edge of the park)

Summary

Langtons is a disused gravel pit that is now a small fishing lake surrounded by woodland. It is an important geological site because it was one of the very few places where the 'Bagshot Pebble Bed' was formerly exposed.

Summary of the geological interest:

The Bagshot Pebble Bed is a layer of well-rounded flint pebbles that occurs on top of the Bagshot Sand. It has been interpreted by some geologists as being formed on the floor of a shallow, subtropical sea some 50 million years ago immediately after deposition of the Bagshot Sand; perhaps representing a beach as the coastline migrated across Essex. Others consider it to be younger, perhaps a marine deposit laid down at the very beginning of the Ice Age.

On top of the pebble bed is a layer of sandy gravel that is distinctly different to the pebble bed, but similar to gravel found at other high points, such as High Beach, Langdon Hills and Rayleigh. This high level gravel is thought to have been laid down during the early Ice Age, perhaps one million years ago, by northward-flowing tributaries of the River Thames (which at that time flowed across north Essex and Suffolk). Formerly called Pebble Gravel and shown on modern geological maps as 'Stanmore Gravel', it consists mostly of flint but also other rock types proving that Kent was the source of these rivers.

The pit is overgrown and neither the pebble bed nor the gravel is currently visible.

Scientific interest and site importance

The pit at Langtons once provided a fine section of Bagshot Pebble Bed overlain by Pebble Gravel (now called Stanmore Gravel).

Whitaker (1889) states that the thickness of the Bagshot Pebble Bed is 'about 15 feet' and provides an illustration that shows much fine soft sand in the upper part of the bed with the pebbles closely packed in the lower part. In his illustration the pebble bed is overlain by up to 6 feet of pebbly gravel (Pebble Gravel).

The Langtons section was also illustrated in Dines and Edmunds (1925) who described the 'Bagshot Pebble Bed' as 'round, blue flint pebbles, some partly desilicified, from half an inch to two inches in diameter, in a coarse white, sandy matrix; a seam of light-grey silty clay halfway down and several minor intercalations of sand'. Trial borings made at that time show that below the floor of the pit the Bagshot Pebble Bed 'passes down into coarse white sand composed partly of flint fragments'.

Dines and Edmunds describe the 'Pebble Gravel' at the top of the pit as a 'three foot bed of elongated flint pebbles with their longer axes vertical and average lengths of three inches. Some worn nodular flints and a few pebbles of Bunter quartzite and of sarsen, in a matrix of red and grey clay'.

The site is not only of historical interest but has potential for research. One issue that needs to be resolved is whether some of the old accounts are describing this pit or a pit on the east side of Sandpit Lane referred to in Middlemiss (1955).

Other information

The geology of the park and South Weald village is varied and interesting. It is also very typical of this part of Essex making this site important for the teaching of geology. Langtons Pit is of particular educational interest as an example of one of the many controversial geological debates on the origin of rocks that has still not been resolved.

The pit is currently separated from the Country Park by a fence and permission to visit should be obtained from the Ranger Service. Cars should be parked in the main public car park. From here it is about 10 minutes walk across the park to the pit. Brentwood railway station is within 2 miles (about 3 kilometres).

Weald Country Park is noticeably hilly. As a result there are many fine views. The park is managed by Essex County Council with Brentwood Borough Council.

3. Brentwood Brickworks, Potential Local Geological Site, TQ586932

Brentwood Brickworks Pit (disused)

Summary

Former brickworks pit that has revealed a remarkable number of fossils over a period of over 80 years. The walls of the pit are now completely obscured by vegetation, the floor of the quarry being occupied by numerous industrial units. However, there is still the potential for new finds to be made if any further excavations are carried out. The pit is a former geological SSSI.

Site description

In the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries the Brentwood Brick and Tile Company operated a large clay pit exposing London Clay (Division 5), Claygate Beds and Bagshot Sand. The sections exposed were very fossiliferous and historically important and as such were the subject of numerous geological excursions by the Geologists Association and the Tertiary Research Group between 1890 and 1973. Berdinner (1925) gives a geological section visible while the pit was working.

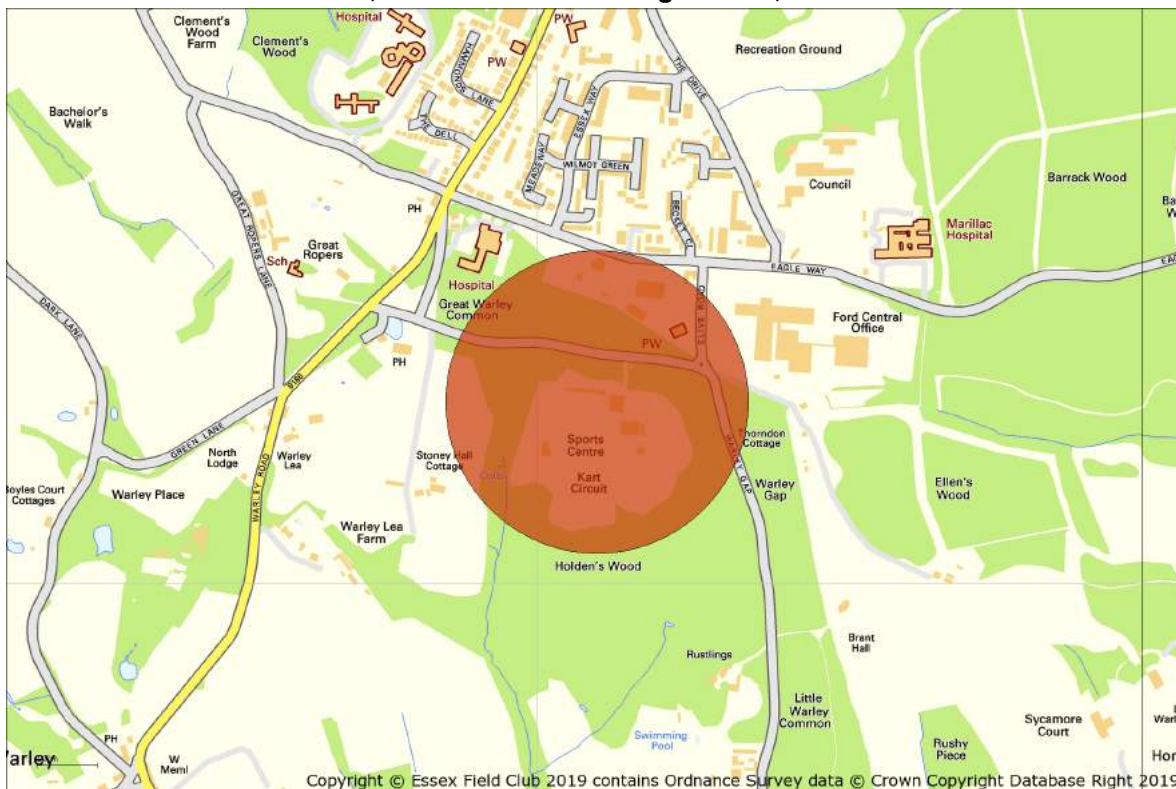

Kirby (1975) and Bristow et al (1980) provides a list of the fossils that have been found. They include 46 species of mollusc, three species of shark, a crab, lobster and bird bone. The bird bone was found by B.E. Brett and is now in the Natural History Museum.

The brickworks dates back to at least 1878 when it was advertised in the Kelly's Directory of that year.

Brentwood Brickworks Pit was a geological Site of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI) until it was denotified under Natural England's Geological Conservation Review in the late 1980s.

4. Holdens Wood Gravel Pits, Potential Local Geological Site, TQ591913

Holdens Wood Gravel Pits (disused)

Summary

The disused pits in Holdens Wood are scientifically important because the origin of this gravel, known as Warley Gravel or Stanmore Gravel, has not yet been resolved. The gravel in the pits here has been studied for over a century and are therefore also important in the history of geology. The wood is privately owned but the pits can be viewed from the road and the footpath.

Summary of the geological interest

Holdens Wood is a classic site that has been mentioned in scientific papers since at least the 1880s. The disused gravel pits in the wood are the type-site for the Warley Gravel, a subdivision of what was formerly called Pebble Gravel (now renamed Stanmore Gravel). Similar gravel is found on hilltops elsewhere in the London Basin and its origin is still debated today. Warley has been pivotal in this debate for over a century.

Warley Gravel caps the highest ground at Warley and Brentwood and its high altitude (over 100 metres above sea level) indicates that it dates from the early Ice Age, probably over one million years ago. One theory is that the gravel was laid down by a northward-flowing tributary of the Thames, at a time when the Thames flowed across what is now North Essex and Suffolk.

Warley Gravel consists mostly of extremely well-rounded flint pebbles in a sandy matrix. These pebbles were originally formed on an ancient beach and are probably derived from marine deposits of Eocene age in Kent. In the topmost layers the pebbles are densely packed together with little sand between them. These pebbles are visible in the paths, in the pit sides, and in the roots of fallen trees. There is also evidence of repeated freezing and thawing (permafrost), which must have occurred during the most recent glacial stage.

Two Edwardian brick cottages in Warley Hill, nearby, are faced with rounded pebbles which most likely came from these pits.

Scientific interest and site importance

Warley Gravel outcrops on the high ground at Warley and Brentwood and similar gravels exist at lower altitudes around Doddinghurst and Kelvedon Hatch. All these deposits have now been reclassified as Stanmore Gravel based on a description of similar outcrops at Harrow Weald (Ellison 2004). The origin of the Warley Gravel/Stanmore Gravel is discussed by Gibbard (1994) who favoured the idea of a northward-flowing Thames tributary; and Ellison (2004) who resurrected an old established theory that it may be an early Ice Age marine deposit.

At Holdens Wood the Warley Gravel appears to be about 3 metres thick which was the average depth of the pits. The gravel lies on the bedrock of Bagshot Sands, which is exposed in the bottom of the pits. Dines and Edmunds (1925) provide a descriptive section through the gravel at Holdens Wood. They also provide the following summary:

It consists of pebbles of flint set densely in a matrix of coarse-grained red or yellow micaceous sand, often clayey. Small quartz pebbles are common and slightly worn flints, some of them seven or eight inches in greatest length are to be found. Lower Greensand chert is present, but not common. The flint pebbles are often stained deep red or zoned with red and white banding. Some of them are desilicified, when they are white, soft and friable. The characteristic feature of the gravel is the presence of elongated, roughly cigar-shaped, flint pebbles of all sizes up to six inches or more in length. Between 20 and 30 per cent of the flint pebbles are of this form. In the uppermost 3 or 4 feet of gravel the pebbles and stones lie with their longer axes vertical, a phenomenon usually attributed to repeated freezing of the soil.

The pits are historically important having been studied for over a century. They were first visited by the Geologists Association and the Essex Field Club in 1889 (Herries et.al. 1889). They remain scientifically important as the origin of the gravels is still unresolved.

Other information

The area of scientific importance is restricted to the well-known pits at the northern edge of Holdens Wood. The site of the lesser known pit in the centre of the wood is now occupied by Brentwood Leisure Park. The wood is privately owned. At the time of writing part of the wood is used for outdoor gaming.

5. Thorndon Country Park North, Potential Local Geological Site, TQ604915

Site name: Thorndon Country Park North, Brentwood (site includes part of Little Warley Common)

Grid reference: TQ 604 915 (entrance to country park)

Brief description of site: Country park with varied landforms and outcrops of London Clay, Claygate Beds, Bagshot Sand and glacial gravel. There are two exposures of glacial gravel.

Summary of the geological interest:

Thorndon Country Park North and Little Warley Common have a varied geology, the oldest surface rocks dating back to the Eocene period. These rocks consist of London Clay, Claygate Beds and Bagshot Sand, three types of sediment laid down successively in a sub-tropical sea some 50 million years ago. There are no permanent exposures of these rocks although Bagshot Sand is frequently visible in the roots of fallen trees at the northern end of the Country Park.

To the south of the Park and on Little Warley Common are large patches of glacial gravel dating from the Ice Age. This gravel was deposited some 450,000 years ago by colossal torrents of melt water issuing from an ice sheet, the edge of which was then situated only a short distance north of here. Ice then covered almost all of Britain to a thickness sometimes in excess of one kilometre. The gravel therefore provides evidence of an exceptionally cold period of the Ice Age, a time when Essex was an extremely barren and inhospitable landscape.

Two permanent sections through glacial gravel have been created by re-excavating the edge of old gravel pits at Scrub Hill on Little Warley Common (TQ 6045 9110) and in Thorndon Country Park (TQ 6127 9100). The exposure in Thorndon Country Park is described in detail in a recent article in Essex Naturalist (Lucy 2013).

Scientific interest and site importance

The prime value of this site is education but there is some potential for research on the permanent exposures of glacial gravel. The gravel consists of coarse sand and extremely well-rounded pebbles of flint that are mostly derived from the pebble gravel (Stanmore Gravel) on the high ground of Warley, which is thought to have been laid down by a river during a much earlier period of the Ice Age. The pebbles, however, were clearly originally shaped by rolling on a beach and were almost certainly originally derived from Eocene pebble beds. Some flint nodules are also present, no doubt washed from the boulder clay and originating from the Chalk of Cambridgeshire. A detailed analysis of the gravel constituents has yet to be carried out.

Thorndon Park North also has some interesting landforms. To the south the spread of glacial gravel is dissected by several streams, which have cut through the Claygate Beds exposing the underlying London Clay. It is possible to follow steeply sloping paths which pass over different rock types and appreciate the horizontal nature of the strata.

This site is important because in few other places in the district can glacial deposits be seen. The gravel provides a rare opportunity to study the evidence of the Anglian ice sheet, which, at its greatest extent, reached as far south as Brentwood and Hornchurch.

Other information

For its biodiversity importance much of Thorndon Country Park North now forms part of Thorndon Park Site of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI). Thorndon Country Park is owned by Essex County Council. At the north end of the park is Thorndon Countryside Centre.

Little Warley Common, which is now mostly woodland, is owned by Brentwood Borough Council. Access to the common, and the gravel pit on Scrub Hill, is available via a gate from the country park. Close by, on the grassy common beside Childerditch Lane, there are views across the Thames valley to Kent. The Anglian ice sheet diverted the Thames to its present course which means that the modern Thames valley was formed after the deposition of the glacial gravel.

Adjacent to Thorndon Visitor Centre is a Jurassic fossilised tree stump from the Isle of Portland in Dorset that was donated to the country park by the Essex Field Club when the Passmore Edwards Museum in Stratford closed. It has no geological connection with the park but it is of educational value and of interest to visitors. It is provided with a descriptive plaque.
